Manuál 3-33

If, with a runner on first base and another on second, the batter (third in the batting order) hits to the shortstop, who throws to second in time to put out the runner, we will note the other runner's arrival on third base with the number four, while the batter's arrival on first base is by fielder's choice. This is because the runner advanced on the hit (clearly, the shortstop realized he had no time to put out the runner, otherwise he would have thrown to third base), while the batter reached first base because the defense preferred to put out a more advanced runner.

Manuál 3-34

With a runner on first base and another on third, the pitcher tries to pick off the runner on first base, but muffs the throw.

Thanks to this error, the runner on third scores a run and the runner on first base advances to second.

The advance by the runner on third base is scored with the number five in parentheses, since he took advantage of the error against the runner who was fifth in the batting order; in this case the arrival of the hindmost runner on second base is considered to have been due to an extra base error. For this runner we mention the number of the player at bat at the time of the error in the upper corner of the base square.

Manuál 3-34

If a decisive error is committed with two men out, no advances are considered to have been on hits, and all numbers are in parentheses, since if the play had been correct there would have been three putouts and no one would have been able to advance. If any fielder commits a catching error, any advances are recorded in parentheses, provided that the scorer does not consider that the runner could have advanced if the fly ball had been caught correctly.

Manuál 3-35

With runners on first and second and less than two outs, the batter hits a ground ball to the third baseman, who muffs the catch, enabling all runners to reach base safely. In this case the advances are not recorded with parentheses because, despite the error, it is assumed that the third baseman would not have been able to play for anyone other than the batter-runner.

The runners would have reached base safely even with a correct play.

Manuál 3-35

If it is judged that the third baseman could more easily have played for the runner on second base, the action is recorded in this example, but even here there are no parentheses for the runner on third base, and the batter-runner is recorded as having reached first on fielder's choice.
